Interpretation Solutions

Over the Phone Interpreting (OPI)

- True to its name, this form of interpretation occurs orally over the phone
- Interpretation is spoken word-for-word after a speaker is finished talking
- Often used for webinars and phone conferences

Simultaneous Interpreting

- Interpreter speaks at or near the same rate of speech as the speaker, allowing interpretation to happen more quickly
- Usually preferred for longer passages of speech or in cases where pauses for interpretation might delay proceedings (e.g., live events)

Consecutive Interpreting

- Interpreter waits until the speaker has finished a sentence / message in the source language before repeating it in the target language
- Best suited for conversations during which speech happens a few sentences at a time (e.g., medical settings, one-on-one meetings, legal proceedings, etc.)

Liaison Interpreting

- Interpreter paired with an individual to provide conversational support and clarification
- Works for lengthy interactions (e.g., long business meetings, tours, etc.)

Video Remote Interpreting (VRI)

- Executed with digital streaming technology, VRI combines the benefits of face-to-face interpretation with the on-demand nature of over-the-phone interpretation
- Used in a variety of settings, including communicating corporate messages to global employees, international training seminars, etc.
